

"Opening with Simon and Garfunkel's "The Boxer," the evening took the audience back to the days of lounging in their teenage bedrooms listening to beloved words and melodies playing on their record players. The stories created an appreciation for the writing of each song. Dayton told of Campbell's love of poetry between playing songs like "Wichita Lineman" and "Rhinstone Cowboy." The music was transformative, as hit after hit filled the room with many members of the audience singing to the words of "Mandy" and "I Write the Songs." Laven completed his arch of songs with a haunting version of "The Sound of Silence" in harmony with Kilgallon that brought the room to tears."
